An Editorial Eulogy

Dr Hilary Paniagua, Editor-in-Chief

I am writing this piece today with deep sadness for the loss of one of our founder board members Vinette Cross, not only with the desire to pay tribute to her but more from the need to do so. This acknowledgement is the Journal’s chance to say thank you for the way you have enriched the lives of students, colleagues, authors and readers with your creativity, understanding and insight. For me your greatest gift was your eloquence and poetry which you used imaginatively to inspire and instruct others. Your desire to challenge convention whilst not letting go of your wisdom or mischievousness is irreplaceable and will be missed. Your contribution to the Journal and the journey of others was always underpinned by originality and vision which will never be forgotten.

There is the world of the flesh, and there is the spirit world. When the flesh is gone the spirit forever remains. Their voices speak to those who know how to listen. Wisdom is born in the heart, and then spoken.

Wolf Clan Song