Introduction

Most students make good progress during their time at University, despite the strains and stresses of academic life. However, an increasing number of students are finding that there are difficulties which impact on their lives and prevent effective learning and academic progress. For these students supporting action could be beneficial. The purpose of this document is to provide information to those members of the University who are likely to be offering relevant support to students with these difficulties.

Some students may directly approach a member of staff for support while others may be reluctant to seek help and try to struggle on, however, symptoms of their difficulties may become apparent. This document helps look at what some of those difficulties are, how they might be identified and how you might help the student start to address them. It also aims to provide some strategies for dealing with more complex situations.

This document, an updated and abridged version of the policy and guidance available to staff and students, approved by the University’s Academic Board in 2004, seeks to help staff help students in difficulty. The full version of this document, which you are encouraged to look at, can be found at www.wlv.ac.uk/mentalhealth
Policy Statement – from the University of Wolverhampton Mental Health Policy

The University is committed to:

- Raising mental health awareness throughout the University.
- Working in partnership with students who are experiencing mental health problems.
- Ensuring respect and confidentiality for all members of its community.
- Providing all staff with opportunities to develop appropriate skills and knowledge in this area.
- Acknowledging and responding to mental health issues when reviewing policies and procedures.
- Working in liaison with external, local and national support agencies.
- Ensuring that on campus student support services are readily available and accessible to all students.
- Exploring new initiatives which could promote the mental well-being of students and prevent mental health problems.

Student Mental Health – Definitions

- The term 'mental health' properly describes a sense of well-being: the capacity to live in a resourceful and fulfilling manner, having a sense of resilience to deal with the challenges and obstacles which life presents.

- Mental health problems/difficulties are terms which can be used to describe temporary reactions to a painful event, stress or external pressures, or symptoms of alcohol or drug use, lack of sleep or physical illness; this terminology also describes long term conditions which may have a significant effect on an individual’s ability to function, sometimes referred to as mental illness.

- It is good practice to listen to, and respect, the terminology used by those experiencing mental health difficulties themselves.

- There may be particular groups of students who may at any time be considered more vulnerable. This could include international students or those under 18 years of age. There are also particular times when student life is more stressful.

Student Mental Health Issues - Key Points

- The University has a duty of care to its staff, students and visitors. Like health and safety matters this duty is the responsibility of all staff and not solely the specialist support services.

- Taking proactive measures prior to any issues arising should assist you to deal with the situation confidently and as effectively as possible.
  - Take time to consider this document and the full version available at www.wlv.ac.uk/mentalhealth
  - Take part in training opportunities within your School or service when available.
  - Talk to colleagues, or as a department about how you could handle different situations arising from students’ mental health difficulties.
• Students with documented mental health conditions are likely to be protected by the recently amended Part 4 of the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA), which make it unlawful for the University to discriminate against disabled people in any of the following ways: direct discrimination; failure to make reasonable adjustments; disability-related discrimination; victimisation\(^1\).

• Under the DDA 2006 the University also has a proactive duty to promote equality of opportunity between disabled persons and non-disabled persons\(^2\).

• The University supports successfully a number of students with declared mental health needs. Students who declare a mental health condition can approach the SEC for non medical support which can be tailored to their requirements.

• It should not be assumed that all students with mental health difficulties will be disruptive or cause major difficulties. Most students who approach staff will have a mental health difficulty of a temporary nature, rather than a ‘mental illness’, which is quite rare.

• Students need to know that any information they give will be treated with respect. It is important for staff to share information only for the purposes of providing care, or for the protection of the student or others. A student’s request for confidentiality must be respected except in the rare instances where his or her life is in danger, or there is a danger to others, or there is a legal requirement to do so (eg a crime has been committed).

• Parents or other family members may approach staff to express concern about the welfare of a student. It is University policy not to give out information about a student without their permission. If the person expressing the concern is willing you could approach the student on his or her behalf, relay his or her concerns and ask the student to make contact with him or her. For more information on disability-related confidentiality please go to the main document which can be found at www.wlv.ac.uk/mentalhealth

• Some students can cause much anxiety to staff and fellow students, who may want someone to do something to make the problem go away. There is usually no ‘magic wand’ available from any internal support service or external source which can provide instant solutions to what are often difficult, challenging and complex issues, particularly if a student is unwilling to seek help and the conditions do not exist to require interventions without his/her consent.

• Whilst acknowledging many staff have much to offer students, it is important to recognise personal and professional limitations when offering support and to know when to seek specialist help and assistance. Not everyone will be confident to offer support in this area, but listening to someone or informing him or her about where help can be obtained is often invaluable.

• It is important to leave responsibility (with exceptions noted later) for resolving a student’s mental health problems in the hands of that student.

• Crises or other difficult events can impact on others, apart from the student immediately involved. The welfare of everyone should also be acknowledged and addressed.

• The summary advice in this document is based on a variety of sources of guidance and examples of good practice from other institutions.

\(^1\) More details on the DDA are available from www.drc.gov.uk or from Cindy Williams-Findlay

\(^2\) See www.wlv.ac.uk/disabilityequality for more information on this aspect of the DDA.
Important information on support

- Members of staff should feel free to consult in confidence with the Counselling Service, one of the other specialist services, or other suitable members of staff, to talk matters over or gain support. It is acknowledged that supporting someone experiencing mental health problems is often difficult and challenging, and that staff and students should not feel alone in such situations. The Student Enabling Centre (SEC) and Counselling Services can provide guidance and training to staff on how to support students with mental health difficulties and recommend additional sources of guidance as appropriate. In the first instance contact Cindy Williams-Findlay or Charlotte Joseph.

- It is acknowledged that there can sometimes be specific issues when working with groups which include students with mental health difficulties.

Student Mental Health Difficulties – Recognising the Signs and Taking Action

The following behaviours do not of themselves indicate a mental health problem. They should be used only as a trigger to enquire and explore with the student what they consider may be the problem and encourage him/her to find help, if appropriate.

Any of the following symptoms can affect anyone at some time in his or hers life, but if a student is experiencing several of these symptoms over a period of time or there is a rapid increase in their severity, it may be appropriate to offer help. Students, like the rest of us, often do not ask for help when faced with a problem.

Consider the following questions:

- Has the student told you there is a problem?
- Have there been significant changes in the student’s appearance, (e.g. weight loss/gain, student is looking unkempt etc.)
- Does the student exhibit drug or alcohol use?
- Is the student drawing attention to himself by being loud and excessive, flat or agitated?

Further information can be found in the ‘useful contacts’ section of this document, in response to queries from colleagues.
• Has the student’s mood changed – mood swings, excessive unhappiness or the opposite, excessive ebullience, or lack of energy?
• Has there been a change in the student’s behaviour, such as not handing in work, not attending, doing too much work, withdrawing?
• Have others expressed concern about the student? (e.g. flatmates, friends, colleagues).

If ‘yes’ you may find some of the following useful:

• Don’t avoid the situation or pretend nothing is wrong as this could only make matters worse
• Approach the student in a sensitive manner
• If it is clear that there is a problem do not collude with a student who finds it difficult to acknowledge the problem by minimising it. You have a right to feel worried about the situation.

If the student DOES want to talk about their problem

• Try to recognise what you can realistically do.
• Explore options but try not to give advice that is beyond the boundaries of your role or skills.
• Try to arrange a follow up appointment to see that the student has arranged the support needed, or followed through what s/he said s/he was going to do.
• It is not usually your job to solve the problem, instead it is important to try to empower the student to work out what can be done.
• Remember that the university and the students’ union offer a variety of ways to support students.

If the student does NOT want to talk about their problem

• It can be extremely difficult and frustrating when someone refuses to admit that they have a problem.
• If it is not an emergency and the student does not wish to talk about his or her problem then that is his or her right, and his or her wishes should be respected.
• You could make it clear that you are available should the student want your help in the future.
• Express your concerns, however, it is not your responsibility to solve the difficulty and if you are unable to suggest a way forward, do not view this as a sign of failure.
• Consider whether it would be helpful for you to consult with a professional, for example, someone from within your School or Department, the Counselling Service or the Student Enabling Centre. The consultation could be in the form of a debriefing, or to share what action you have taken and can be done whilst safeguarding the student’s anonymity.
• Is there someone else who could help?

How to refer the reluctant student to the Counselling Service

Second opinion
Suggest to the student that a referral would help both you and him or her. Explain that the student’s problem is outside your area of expertise and that there are appropriately trained professionals to help.
No analyst’s couch involved!
Dispel any myths which surround counselling. Encourage the student to believe that help-seeking is a sign of strength not a weakness and that seeing a counsellor is not for the crazy or desperate. (If you are unsure refer to the Counselling Services web-site to get a better understanding of what counselling is about).

Suggest options
Counselling is not the only alternative, in fact, for some it may not be appropriate. Check out what the student needs and wants, and help him or her to find it. It is often useful and enlightening to present a range of options when discussing support services. There is a list of useful contacts at the end of this document. Or visit the Counselling Services website for further help, www.wlv.ac.uk/counsellingservices

Explore the student’s reluctance
If you explore the student’s reluctance to seek help you may be able to address his or her reservations.

Information
If the student is unsure about seeking help point them in the right direction as to where to find help in the future. (See ‘suggest options’ above).

Confidentiality
The student can be reassured that even if he or she is referred to the Counselling Service by a member of staff, no information will be passed on by the Counselling Service, even to the referrer.

Making an appointment
If you feel it necessary you could try to help the student make the appointment. Whilst it is better for students to take the initiative, for some, particularly those who are depressed or feel unable to negotiate any details, a helping hand would not go amiss. There is always a drop-in session available during term time between 12.30-1.30 at city campus – no appointment necessary. Students can then find out whether this is a suitable place for them to get help.

Honesty about involving others
It is important for staff to share information only for the purposes of providing care, or for the protection of the student or others. A student’s request for confidentiality must be respected except in the rare instances where his or her life is in danger, or there is a danger to others, or there is a legal requirement to do so (eg a crime has been committed).

If you feel the situation is an emergency (you believe there is the possibility of harm to the student or others) and the student will not see a professional, you may need to speak to someone on his or her behalf. If possible before doing so discuss this with the student and give the student the choice about whom you will contact.
Case Study – Student A

Residential Services staff met with Student A, following complaints and concerns raised by caretakers and fellow students. At the meeting the student revealed that he had recently began to drink again and that his feelings of self loathing lead to other acts of self harm. The student was therefore given information and encouraged to access support from the University Counselling Services and external alcohol groups.

The student’s self harming resulted in an overnight stay in hospital a month later. Upon his return to Halls he was taken to his GP surgery, where he consented to undergo assessment at Penn Hospital. He then discharged himself the next day and returned to his Halls of Residence, where he continued to show signs of being unwell. Residential Services staff therefore contacted Penn Hospital, who sent a Community Psychiatric Nurse (CPN) to undertake an assessment on site and agree a care plan. This involved a daily visit from the Mental Health Team, reducing to 3 visits per week after 2 months.

The student has since been able to re-commence his studies. He continues to receive visits from the outreach team on an ad-hoc basis and attends the Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) meetings at the Chaplaincy. The student has built up trust and a good rapport with Residential Services staff and feels able to ask for help when necessary.

Although Residential Services do not have staff with specific expertise in mental health issues, they were able to access support from a variety of contacts, which were provided to them at the time of the CPN’s visit.

Case Study – Student B

Student B had not been attending classes and concerns had been raised amongst staff. B’s tutor invited her to a meeting to check her progress. B came in looking dishevelled and exhausted. She appeared introverted, and at the same time agitated to be in the room with the tutor, keeping her eyes fixed on the floor. Eventually the tutor elicited some information from B – she found herself virtually unable to leave her room, let alone get her work done.

The tutor felt concerned by B’s narrative and asked what help she was getting. B said she wouldn’t see a doctor – she had had previous bad experiences with a GP, nor did she think counselling would help. The tutor, however, remained concerned and remembered that there was a drop-in service between 12.30 to 1.30 everyday in the University Counselling Service. He suggested that the student could talk to someone for 20 minutes just to see what counselling was like – no strings attached.

B was reluctant, but the tutor helped B see that he was not trained to help with the problems she was describing, however, he would be there for her about her academic work and they could book another appointment to talk about that. B agreed to go to a drop-in on condition that the tutor came with her. After delivering B to the Gateway B saw a counsellor for 25 minutes, during which time trust was built. B arranged to have a full-length appointment.

At that appointment B explored both her feelings and also her concerns about her mental health. The counsellor helped B recognise that it would be in her best interests if her GP was involved to help with her well-being. The counsellor was careful to empower B and not force her into any course of action.

B was offered antidepressant medication for anxiety and depression, and received clarification from her GP about symptoms. B was concerned about. B went back to her personal tutor to help arrange a leave of absence from the University for one semester to give her time and space to get back on her feet, during which she continued to receive weekly counselling sessions in the University Counselling Service, as well as continued medication.
In more rare situations:

- Is the student talking actively about suicide?
- Has the student taken an overdose?
- Is the student very disturbed*?
- Is the student clearly mentally ill*?
- Is the student a danger to him or herself, or others?

If the answer is YES, proceed to the next step. If the answer is NO, see next page.

*More serious signs (albeit uncommon and could be alcohol or drug related): erratic behaviour, lability of mood; agitation; disinhibition; paranoia; incoherent speech; repetitive actions; hearing voices; holding irrational beliefs; inappropriate behaviour.

In appropriate cases when the situation is urgent and requires immediate action, phone for an Ambulance, (9)999 and call Security (see below).

Other courses of action include, depending upon the situation:
1) Consult with your Head of Department, Line Manager, Counselling Services or SEC and
2) Encourage the student to seek an emergency appointment with his/her doctor. Follow up on this with the student. (If the student is not registered locally, that doctor will probably recommend they see a local doctor as a temporary patient).
Or
3) Contact NHS Direct
Or
4) Arrange for student to go to local A&E

Out of office hours call the local doctors on-call service* or NHS direct.

Consult with your line manager, head of department, the Counselling Services; or if out of hours, someone appropriate. A second opinion helps and you do not have to identify the student in your discussions.

IF student is disturbed, dangerous, or they or someone else’s life is in danger call the police (9) 999 and security at your campus.

Stay calm and remember your safety, as well as that of the student and other students is of paramount importance.

Mental Health Difficulties – NON urgent problems

Is the problem urgent?

YES → See previous page

NO

How do you know there is a problem?
The student or somebody else has told you?
Does student seem different – tearful, sad, distant, tense, irritable, angry, lacking confidence?
Are there significant changes in the student’s appearance?
Is student getting behind academically or not attending?
Is student drawing attention to self by being loud, flat or agitated?
Are their signs of anxiety?
Is there alcohol or drug misuse?

*More serious signs (albeit relatively uncommon and could be alcohol or drug related):
erratic behaviour, lability of mood; agitation; disinhibition; paranoia; incoherent speech; repetitive actions; hearing voices; holding irrational beliefs; inappropriate behaviour.

What to consider
Don’t avoid the situation.
Be honest.
Express your concerns.
Do you feel able to help?
Are you the most appropriate person to offer help?
Do you have the time and skills?
Do you know who to contact for advice?

Does the student think there is a problem?

YES

Refer student to appropriate support service (see directory at end of this document).
If unsure, contact Counselling Services or Student Enabling Centre.
Consultation/‘offloading’ for yourself is available via the Counselling Service.
Arrange follow up appointment with student.

NO

Respect the right of the student if they do want to discuss their problems or seek help at this time.
Offer an invitation for the student to return.

Listen to the student’s concerns and what kind of help he or she wants.
Offer appropriate help where possible.
Offer practical alternatives where they exist.
Provide appropriate reassurance.
Refer to appropriate source of support if necessary.
Be aware of remaining within your levels of competence.
